Developer credit identifies the person who developed the website. It does not, by itself, transfer or change ownership. Any ownership transfer, assignment, or other rights between APM and the developer are governed by their signed agreement and applicable law.

3. MATERIALS COVERED

Subject to the exclusions in Section 4, this notice covers APM-specific original materials, including:

- Website design, page composition, layout, visual styling, and original UI presentation;
- Original HTML, CSS, JavaScript, and other custom source-code portions developed for APM;
- Original page text, graphics, brand presentation, and project-specific documentation supplied or created for APM;
- Original database schema, application structure, and custom implementation materials created for the project;

4. THIRD-PARTY AND EXCLUDED MATERIALS

This notice does not claim ownership of third-party or pre-existing materials merely because they appear in, are linked by, or are used by the website. Such materials may include open-source libraries, frameworks, fonts, icon sets, stock photographs, external APIs, platform services, plugins, and third-party trademarks or content.

Those materials remain subject to their respective owners’ rights and license terms. APM-specific ownership applies only to materials that APM or its authorized developer owns or has validly licensed or assigned. Visitors and developers must independently comply with applicable third-party licenses.

5. LIMITED PERMISSION FOR WEBSITE VISITORS

Visitors are granted a limited, revocable, non-exclusive, non-transferable permission to access and view the live website for its ordinary intended informational and business purposes.

This permission does not grant a right to download, reproduce, clone, republish, distribute, sell, modify, or commercially reuse the website’s protected original materials or source files.

Without prior written permission from APM or the applicable rights holder, no person may:

- Copy, duplicate, mirror, or reproduce the website or its original design, page structure, source code, or substantial parts of its content;
- Steal, extract, download, disclose, or reuse private, restricted, or non-public project files, credentials, configuration secrets, or database materials;
- Rebrand, modify, adapt, or create a derivative website from APM's protected original work for personal, client, or commercial use;

- Remove or alter copyright, ownership, developer-credit, or attribution notices;
- Use APM branding, logos, names, or visual identity in a way that suggests unauthorized affiliation or endorsement;
- Circumvent technical access controls or access restricted areas without authorization;

7. PERMISSIONS AND AUTHORIZED WORK

Any permission to copy, reuse, modify, transfer, publish, or deploy APM source code or design must be granted in writing by an authorized APM representative or the relevant rights holder.

Written permission should identify the materials, purpose, scope, duration, permitted users, and any conditions. A verbal statement or possession of a file should not be treated as a general license to reuse it.

8. VIOLATIONS AND LEGAL REMEDIES

Unauthorized copying, file theft, reproduction, distribution, or misuse may constitute infringement or another unlawful act, depending on the facts and applicable law. APM and/or the relevant rights holder may seek available remedies, which may include a notice to cease, removal or takedown requests, injunctions, damages, accounts of profits, recovery of infringing copies, or other civil or legal proceedings where available.

No remedy is automatic; the rights holder must establish the applicable legal basis and facts. This notice does not promise a particular court outcome or replace advice from a qualified lawyer.

9. GOVERNING LAW

This notice is intended to operate subject to the laws of Pakistan, including applicable copyright and intellectual-property legislation, and any valid written agreement governing the APM website and its deliverables.
